the second line has seven the third line has five

Geography

Imagine that you have been washed ashore on a desert island. You have no idea how big it is or if it is inhabited. After some time a man appears walking along the beach towards you carrying two buckets. He does not speak, but gestures that you must choose one of the two buckets. One has water in it, one has diamonds. Which would you choose?

Think about your choice. Why do some of us choose diamonds over water when:

- we know that without water we could die within three days?
- diamonds have no intrinsic value on a desert island – they are beautiful and rare to us but they do nothing to support life?

Why do we value water so little? Is it that

- water is something we in the UK see as widely available?
- we live in a developed economy where clean water is accepted as the norm?
- commodities in abundant supply are usually valued less?

Use this information, and anything else you can find online, to help you write a short speech called "I'd choose water over diamonds any day!" Your speech should last for about three minutes.

History

This task asks you to think about what you have learned about Medieval England. Create a piece of work illustrating the differences between life in medieval times and life today. This could be presented as a table, a poster or another way you choose. To make it even better, you could use a Venn diagram to show where there are also areas of similarity. Challenge: answer the question "How far is life today different from life in medieval times?"
